“Building Bridges for Better Health through Engaging Communities”

ABOUT CEI 2018

“Building Bridges for Better Health through Engaging Communities”

The complexity of our greatest health challenges - including chronic illness, health inequities, climate change, spiraling health care costs, and the opioid epidemic - requires a new level of intersectoral collaboration, one that transcends polarizing politics and service siloes.

Join us for the 2018 Community Engagement Institute, where we will engage with diverse stakeholders from across the Birmingham area and beyond to explore innovative ideas for synergizing our efforts to improve the physical, mental, and spiritual health of our communities.

CEI KEYNOTE SPEAKER

Derek M. Griffith, PhD

*Director, Center for Research on Men's Health
Professor of Medicine, Health & Society
Vanderbilt University*

Dr. Derek M. Griffith is the Founder and Director of the Center for Research on Men's Health and Professor of Medicine, Health and Society at Vanderbilt University. Dr. Griffith is trained in psychology and public health, and his research focuses on social, economic and political influences on men's health and racial and ethnic health disparities.

The Center for Research on Men's Health is one of the first university-wide centers in the US that focuses on men's health disparities. Launched in the September 2016, the center has the three-pronged mission of improving men's health, reducing unjust differences in health among men, and improving the health of African American men and other men in the US and across the globe.

Dr. Griffith has published over 100 articles in scientific journals, and he specializes in African American men's health. He has pioneered efforts to understand how Black men think about what it means to be a Black man and how those ideas influence their health. In his research on African American men's health, he has often used a community-based participatory research approach. For his use of this approach to research, in November 2013, Dr. Griffith was presented the Tom Bruce Award by the Community-Based Public Health Caucus of the American Public Health Association in recognition of his leadership in community-based public health and for his research on "eliminating health disparities that vary by race, ethnicity and gender."

Dr. Griffith's men's health research has been funded by the American Cancer Society, the Aetna Foundation, and several institutes within the National Institutes of Health. Currently, Dr. Griffith is conducting two interventions: (1) Mighty Men, the first individually tailored, faith-based weight loss study specifically designed for African American men; and (2) Tailor Made, the first weight loss intervention for African American and Latino men that seeks to incorporate individual psychological and biological factors.

Along with his colleagues, Dr. Griffith is editor of two forthcoming books: the Handbook of Men's Health Disparities (Taylor & Francis) – the first book to describe unjust yet modifiable differences among men in the United States and across the world – and Is it Race or Racism?: State of the Evidence & Tools for the Public Health Professional (APHA Press).

ABOUT CEI

The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching describes community engagement as the collaboration between higher education institutions and their larger communities (local, regional/state, national, global) for the mutually beneficial exchange of knowledge and resources in a context of partnership and reciprocity.
